The enclosed communication was addressed to the Whig in reply to an editorial in that paper. The editor baving courteously declined its publication. I respectfully request its insertion in your journal.

Yours truly, PACIFIC. RICHMOND, October 10, 1875. To the Whig:

Mr. Editor, -In your issue of the 7th, in an editorial upon the "Southern Pacific railroad," you have, unintentionally no doubt, fallen into error upon points which do manifest injustice both to this proposed enterprise and the gentleman whose name is connected with it as its chief promoter. The question as to whether we shall have a Southern Pacific railroad is scarcely an issue now before the southern public. All. it would seem, are agreed that the southern States are entitled to and should have a trans-continental railroad line to the Pacific, and there is scarcely a doubt, if the representatives of the South are united in making the demand, a sufficient number of northern members will acquiesce in it to effect the passage of a bill for this purpose. It is the character of the bill that was before the last Congress, and will probably be submitted to the coming one, that is now giving rise to discussion.

I do not propose to discuss it in its general provisions in this communication. That bill was before the last Congress, and has challenged the emphatic and persistent opposition of the Whig. While I have, therefore, no hope that anything I could say here would dislodge or shake your convictions, the friends of this bill may comfortably rest upon the endorsement it received, as a southern measure, in the last Congress by four fifths of the southern members, and the ophogenerally to know they can be supplied position it met with of about the same hode NORTHERN SATING-APPLES of proportion of the northern members of the same body. But it is simply to draw your attention to a statement contained in your editorial, which would seem to indicate that you had overlooked one of the guarding stipulations of that bill. You say: "He (Mr. Scott) has constructed five hun- places in which to sleep. Many of the old soldred miles of the main road in Texas, at a cost of eleven millions of dollars, and for the great objects to be subserved we may not feel disposed to resist this scheme of obtaining forty thou-and dollars per mile from the nation, or twenty millions of dollars on the five hundred miles which he has completed." That is, you intimate that Mr. Scott wants twenty millions of dollars for five hundred miles of road, which only cost eleven mil-> ground for saying that. If you have, you have made a most damaging point against Mr. Scott. If you will look at the last six and a half lines of the bill, a copy of which, of course, you have, (if not, I will provide you with one,) you will find the following stringent provision:

"Provided, That it shall be the duty of the commissioner or commissioners appointed by the President to certify to the actual expenditure of the moneys required for the purpose of constructing and equipping the lines up to the Government standard, as required by law; and all bonds of the company secured under the mortgage, over and above shall remain in the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not be issued except to provide additional facilities, after the completion of the road, to meet the requirements of the public, as set forth in this act." This, then, is the clear and specific provision of the bill-the rigid guard and impassable barrier-that of these bonds, the interest on which only the Government is asked to guarantee during the construction of the road, none can be issued except to represent actual expenditure absolutely required to build the line, albeit this may be only half the forty thousand dollars ($40,000) a mile, but can in no event exceed it; and these bonds are secured upon a first mortgage upon and possessions, real and personal. rest on? And does not the implied one of the Whig that Colonel Scott has ever asked or expected one dollar of " profit" from the Government on the construction of the line fall with it? . . Again, you say: " For she (the South) has not, nor has Virginia, any personal objection to make against Mr. Scott or any other individual person." I would fain close this communication with this handsome disclaimer towards a gentleman whose motives and purposes have too of en, I think, been sutjects of much unfriendly animudversion. But you follow this passage by saying, "The profit of nine millions (9,000,000) which he (Mr. Scott) is scheming for may be necessary to the repairing of his broken personal fortunes." the Philadelphia Inquirer a notice, which was copied approvingly in other papers North and South, signed by Matthew Baird and Thomas A. Scott, addressed to all parties holding the notes of the California and Texas Railway Construction Company bearing the joint endorsement of those gentlemen. It was a no-Lification to all such persons that the amount of money that would be respectively due them, including interest upon the miturity of said notes, will be paid from and after that date by R D. Barclay, E-q., at his office, No. 233 south Fourth street, Philadelphia, their armory to the City Guard of Norfolk upon presentation, less rebate of interest. These notes mature at various dates, some not prior to April 13, 1876. Thus this financial load, personally and individually assumed by these two gentlemen for the entire indebtedness of the " Cal-Mornin and Texas Railway Construction Company," amounting to six or eight mil-tions of collars, has been nonorably and 1872, far in advance of the time for yesterday the article headed "A painful which their obligations were given.
